Key Industry

A high potential market for global MICE businesses with our vibrant free-enterprise economy and pro-investment policies, Thailand's 5 highlight industries.

Automotive

Practically all of the world's major automakers and auto parts manufacturers have a presence in Thailand, and it's no wonder: the high service standards, strategic location, and ease with which one can do business make it a prime location in the auto industry.

So too does the fact that the ASEAN region's second biggest economy has the largest vehicle-assembling capacity as well as low tariffs that have prompted a surge in exports. Thailand ships vehicles to 130 countries worldwide.

Not only are manufacturing and assembly key components of Thailand's automotive space, foreign car companies are investing in technical and R&D facilities as well. It's an innovative industry, too: in 2009, Toyota started production of hybrid vehicles in Thailand in a natural gas-fueled factory, the first of its kind in ASEAN.

Energy

As Thailand continues to implement a new energy framework that's stable, sustainable, and affordable, opportunities for private-sector involvement are abundant.

Southeast Asia's second largest economy is experiencing rapid growth and increased demands for energy, and with the country producing just 20% of the crude oil it consumes, new measures are in place to reduce foreign oil dependency.

There is a focus on efficient energy use, renewable energy development, and systematic energy management with the goal of extending domestic reserves in crude oil, natural gas, and coal. A secondary aim of this new initiative is for Thailand to become a "Hub for Energy Trade" in the ASEAN region, and with such change comes opportunity.

Domestic and foreign investment has spiked recently in areas like ethanol production, solar cell manufacture and import, solar energy development, biodiesel fuels engineered from Thailand's bounty of cash crops, and public-private partnerships to develop natural-gas powered vehicles.

Food & Agriculture

Every year, scores of international Food & Agribusiness trade shows come to Thailand due to the business opportunities the events present, and because of the wealth of destinations providing fun and authentic experiences.

Food, and the business surrounding it, is ingrained in Thai culture. The country is the only net food exporter in Asia, the result of an abundance of local natural resources from which 80% of ingredients used in the food industry are sourced. This allows for production at highly competitive prices and global competitiveness.

There are nearly 10,000 food processing firms in Thailand today, which employ roughly 600,000 people and generate annual earnings of $25 billion (USD). International consumer markets are open to Thai-made products because production methods and machinery meet the highest international standards, and also because the products are top-quality and authentically Thai.

Infrastructure

Robust automotive, airline, and shipping industries; the ASEAN region's most extensive national highway system; investor-friendly policies towards telecommunications expansion - these are just a few of the advantages that have made Thailand one of Asia's leading logistics hubs.

Thanks to its strategic location in Southeast Asia - and a thorough understanding of the importance of infrastructure - accessibility and availability no longer present challenges as Thailand relies on its vast network of roads, railways, airports, seaports and telecommunications networks to support its export-oriented industrial sectors.

Recently, awareness has shifted to a much more innovative approach to development and an emphasis on high-quality service, management, and regulation of facilities and freight-handling capacity that will ensure continued efficient cargo movement in and around the Kingdom.

Health & Wellness

Thailand is quickly becoming a regional hub for the medical industry, and international firms are taking advantage of its facilities, outstanding service, research and manufacturing capabilities.

Southeast Asia's largest hospital can be found in Bangkok; the country was the first in all of Asia to receive prestigious Joint Commission International (JCI) accreditation; and there are over 1,000 public and 400 private facilities in a nation often regarded as one of the world's leading medical tourism destinations.

As in Western countries, Thailand's medical industry is serviced by fine hospitals and physicians, long-term care facilities, health spas, diagnostic laboratories, pharmacies, and the manufacture of drugs and medical equipment. It's also earning respect as a prime location for R&D and clinical trials in advanced medicine such as stem cell therapy.
